Viral hepatitis as a risk factor for inflammatory bowel disease. The association between inflammatory bowel disease (IBD) and infectious diseases has been a matter of debate for years. The most commonly studied infectious disease in IBD is hepatitis B virus (HBV), although there are few data on the presence of hepatitis C virus (HCV) in patients with IBD. To evaluate the prevalence of HBV and HCV infection in IBD patients. We studied 56 IBD patients and 40 control subjects by detection of HBs antigen, HBs and HBc antibodies, and HCV serology. Statistical analysis was performed by using chi 2 and Student t tests. The prevalence of hepatitis B and C was similar in patients and controls. Among the IBD patients, a subgroup with serologic signs of previous hepatitis infection was detected (n = 5; 8.9%). A previous hepatitis infection was significantly more frequent in patients with chronic ulcerative colitis (CUC) than in patients with Crohn

Keyboard shortcut: Keyboard shortcuts are shortcuts you can use on the keyboard to invoke an application. These shortcuts can be customized and assigned to any application of your choice. Once you assign a keyboard shortcut to an application, you can use it to invoke that application at any time without going through the menu bar or launch screen. To assign a keyboard shortcut to any application: 1. Launch the application you want to customize. 2. Go to the application menu, and click on the 'Edit shortcuts' button. 3. A keyboard shortcuts dialogue box will appear. Press Ctrl+S. 4. Press the keys you want to assign. 5. Click on the 'OK' button to save your changes. 6. To open the application, press the shortcut you assigned to it. NOTE: Keyboard shortcuts are not applicable to all applications, so you can't assign a keyboard shortcut to every application on your computer.
