.Q: node.js mongodb collection scanner returning arrays instead of mongoose objects I have a simple mongodb collection schema with the following structure: books = { authors: [{ name: 'foo' }, { name: 'bar' }], name: { type: String, default: 'none' } }; I have the following find() query that works fine and returns the relevant documents. session.query(' books.authors.name = 'sauthorName' ', { }, { lean: false }); But when I try to modify it slightly to return an array of results, it returns an empty result: var books = []; session.query(' books.authors.name = 'sauthorName' ', { }, { lean: false }); toArray(function(err, docs) { books = docs; }) console.log(books) I don't understand what I am doing wrong here - in my head, the statement I am using should look like this: books = (books.authors).map(function(doc) { return { doc.name } }) So maybe I'm trying to do this backwards? Any help would be appreciated. I am sure I have missed something. A: Your syntax is correct. toArray() is returning an array of documents where as map() is returning an array of arrays. Also, lean=false is not valid and is reserved for using the Aggregation Framework. It's actually removed from MongoDB v3.4.0. Not sure why you'd want to do this. You can actually use lean=true and it will work the way you expect. Here is a sample using an array as a result document (using the Document.populate() method): var Model = require('mongoose').model('Book'); var model = new Model({ authors : [{ name: 'foo' }, { name: 'bar' }], name: { type: String, default: 'none' } }); model.find({ 'books.authors.name': 'sauthorName' },
