The new player movement features on the new next-generation FIFA engine the 'ZIK engine' – a combination of the latest advances in video game technology and the technology from 16 years of motion-capture data collected from real footballers. Players will be able to move in real-time, react to challenges and make more intelligent decisions during gameplay. "In the world of technology, we call this technology 'hyper.' When you move an object or when you put a force on an object, it jumps to another place," said Peter Drinnan, Senior Producer at EA SPORTS. "With this next generation technology, we have taken real-life player movements and actually put them on the screen. You see the player and they react to what you're doing – your touches, your movements, everything. It's a very exciting technological breakthrough that I think will really push the game forward." Drinnan continued: "We captured 22 players participating in an ultra-intense five-hundred meter sprint, so we have 22 really high-intensity movements that you can get immersed in. That's the first step in bringing the game to life." The player motion capture was recorded in Manchester, England in Spring 2012, and during the recording, the professional footballers performed their best full-field sprints around the five-lane Olympic-sized swimming pool the players had been using for two days while filming. The footage was recorded in high-fidelity high-definition using a sophisticated motion-capture system, using a sampling frequency of 120 frames per second. The development team at EA SPORTS found that the new 'HyperMotion' technology also enables more fluid movement on the pitch and enhanced transitions between actions. Players are always more responsive to the challenges on the pitch and understand what their actions are doing in context. With more realistic movement on the pitch, gamers will be able to experience the intensity of what it takes to be a top level professional player. "It is important to us to make sure we capture the physicality of the athlete," said Drinnan. "We want to be able to see the footballer react to what's going on around him. That's something that you can't get with performance capture. The results are exciting. The goal for us is to make the player react in a more natural way." As previously announced, the new animation system is intended to be used in combination with the new next-generation FIFA

FIFA is a franchise of sports video games that is developed by EA Canada and published by Electronic Arts. It is one of the most popular and best-selling franchises of all time, and the sports series is widely regarded as one of the best sports video games and sports video game franchises. The series is also the highest grossing sports franchise of all time, surpassing $3.2 billion in gross revenue as of March 2018. The first FIFA title, published by Eidos Interactive in September 1993, was the first football video game to be released outside of the arcades. The first edition of the franchise used the name Championship Manager and was developed by Mirrorsoft before being acquired by Eidos. FIFA has been available on multiple platforms since the game's release, including the PC, Nintendo 64, PlayStation, GameCube and Xbox. The series has been praised for its extensive gameplay and gameplay innovations, its gameplay engine (previously named EA SPORTS Game Studios FIFA), and most notably for its gameplay realism, realistic player likenesses and depth in its teams and players. Gameplay FIFA features a realistic-to-life gameplay mechanic, in which players move and manipulate the ball with the same degree of accuracy and realism as they do in real sports, like association football. FIFA's player ball physics are implemented by three distinct and unique player-characteristics: Stamina, Stamina Rate and Dribbling. Stamina and Stamina Rate affect movement and acceleration, and Dribbling affects the dribbling capabilities of each player. Real-world movements and tricks can also be executed by players and reproduced realistically, and in-game movement and control is the same for every player on the same pitch. The game has a depth of realism absent from other soccer games, as it simulates all aspects of the sports world, from official team kits and team logos to traditional national flags. Each edition of the series has included an extensive variety of gameplay modes, starting with the first FIFA with a mode for 32 different leagues and culminating with the 2010 edition which featured the first official 'My Team' mode that let players select players from the ones already existing on the game. Other editions included both offline and online modes, featuring more than 600 licensed teams and formations from up to 35 different sports. User interface The user interface in FIFA is more colourful and intuitive compared to previous editions, featuring a new 'FIFA Championship Manager' overhaul.
